*The Guam Preservation Trust.
(GPT) presents the five-year
GPT Historic Preservation
Master Plan as a statement of our community's bold
step towards taking action to preserve and protect our heritage for all to benefit.*

The plan's framework is goal-oriented and therefore provides strategies that if coordinated well, will bring together Guam's citizens and the preservation community to identify where our diverse goals complement historic preservation and how we can all work together to ultimately preserve Guam's heritage.

We look to the Guam State Historic Preservation Office at the Guam Department of Parks and Recreation as the lead agency for Guam's historic preservation and therefore recognize that this plan is a component of the Guam State Historic Preservation Master Plan that we hoped to integrate.

In setting the stage for the development of this plan, we have used the positive change approach as we engaged with the preservation community and the public. From the establishment of the advisory group, to the meetings with stakeholders, our focus on the strengths and skills of the community has made the planning process clear and productive.

Methodology

The methodology applied to the process of developing the plan is the positive change method called the Appreciative Inquiry (often known as AI). The Appreciative Inquiry focuses on the strengths of the community to foster strategies that identifies the best of "what is" to pursue the possibilities of "what could be".

The Appreciative Inquiry was developed by David Cooperrider and Surech Srivastva in the 1980s. The approach is based on the premise that "organizations change in the direction which they inquire." So if we had taken the problems/issues-based approach, which inquires into problems, we will keep finding problems. But if we continue to appreciate what is positive in what our community can offer, we will discover more and more what is best. We can then use these discoveries to build a new future where the best becomes more common.

The Appreciative Inquiry approach is often worked out in practice by using the '4-D' model:

Discover—people talk to one another, often via structured interviews, to discover the times when the organization is at its best. These stories are told as richly as possible.

Dream—the dream phase is often run as a large group conference where people are encouraged to envision the organization as if the peak moments discovered in the 'discover' phase were the norm rather than exceptional.

Design—a small team is empowered to go away and design ways of creating the organization dreamed in the conference(s).

Deliver—the final phase is to implement the changes.

"Be the change you want to see in this world..." -Ghandi

Findings

The results of the appreciative inquiry process conducted at the 2006 Historic Preservation Symposium produced two major findings: 1.) The first most obvious finding was the consensus that the top three goals for the Guam Preservation Trust to address were: a.) Ethnography & Oral History; b.) Repair, Rehabilitation, Restoration or Renovation of Historic Buildings and Structures; and c.) Archaeological Research. 2.) The second finding was through the compilation and analysis of AI responses. The analysis indicated three clusters of recommended strategies: a.) Education; b.) Historic Resource Development; and c.) Community Awareness.

*Manenggon Memorial Site: Hånom Nina'la - Water of Life
Kennosuke Iriyama, Consul General of Japan, hands a bucket of water from the Manenggon and Yilig Rivers as a symbol of peace to Rita Torres Franquez, Manenggon Concentration Survivor and Manenggon Foundation Board Member at the dedication of the Manenggon Memorial Fountain on July 10, 2004.*

Please note that the former Consul General was not intended to participate in this ceremony, but at the last minute, Rita invited him from his seat and he accepted. The intention of the ceremony was to take the waters of the two Rivers that provided life for those who were encamped at Manenggon and pour it into the fountain just seconds before the pump was turned on. Therefore, it's not a forgiveness gesture, but a symbol of the survivor's extension of life.
